From the land comes macadamia nuts

大地が育てたマカデミアナッツ

The year was 1881. Kalakaua was king and Hawaii was still a peaceful monarchy. A man named William Purvis arrived from Australia on a steamship that year bringing with him the first macadamia tree to Hawaii.

Hawaii Macadamia nut trees were first brought to the Hawaiian Islands over 100 years ago from its native land, Australia, but were mainly used for ornamental and shade purposes. It wasn't until the early to mid-20th century that macadamia nuts were cultivated and harvested to enjoy as a delicious food item. Since then Hawaii has become the largest producer of premium macadamia nuts in the world and the leader in cultivation techniques.

For generations our farmers have been picking the finest macadamia nuts from the Big Island of Hawaii. Aloha Farms Hawaii offers whole, half, and diced macadamia nut kernels in commercial grade for usage in cooking and confectionaries.

- We also produce delicate Kona coffee flavored chocolate Peaberry coffee beans and delicious chocolate Kona coffee macadamia nuts.

Grown in the rich volcanic soil, our macadamia nuts are naturally sweet, yield a light creamy color and exude a buttery texture taste profile. Nuts from other parts of the world are usually smaller, more yellowish in color and have a denser texture.

Aloha Farms Hawaii is an active member of the Hawaii Macadamia Nut Association and follows the Nutrient Management, Integrated Pest and Orchard Floor and Canopy Management methods are used.
